Both instructors were very available and helpful. I think this course needs a more current text. I think a review of some basic statistics might be helpful to many, especially since students have been out of their graduate programs for varying amounts of time.

The systematic review was a helpful exercise, but I wish we could have done a meta-analysis. Maybe this could be planned so that at critical junctures, such as selecting the studies, we would be on campus or could have some other form of one-on-one internet interaction - maybe E-luminate sessions.

Thanks for everything - Linda Briggs

This course is very applicable to our studies. I found this course very difficult to do in the distance learning format- I believe it is appropriate to our doctorate- the readings were difficult. I perhaps should have "brushed up" on research information to get up to speed before this course.

I did not get feedback on papers and grades in a timely fashion.

Instructors made a major change in the assignment (meta-analysis to systematic review) based, in part, on student feedback. Change was well coordinated and supported by a change in content. Course change was not disruptive.

Great course.

I understand the rationale for changing the final assignment but I wished we could have left it the way it was.

The course changed direction mid semester and then I could have used more direction on a systematic review, such as discussions on results, impact on clinical practice, etc. I find I learn quite a bit from student and instructors comments.

Both instructors provided timely, constructive feedback.

Dr Pintz is a open, encouraging professor who wants me to grow in the profession and be successful. she wants me to have the tools to utilize when working. she also helps collaboration among each other.

what i liked most was that she was able to see that some of my colleagues would not be able to complete the final process so she adjusted it and created an equally challenging item for them to complete. shows her versatility

Dr Pintz is very approachable to the students

I think that this is an excellent course. It has evolved through the semester but I have learned along with the instructors and feel I grew along with the course

This was definitely a challenging course. I felt that I learned a tremendous amount. I did feel lost once we got to the data collection and data analysis stage. The discussion group helped in guiding me. An exercise in this section may have facilitated the process in writing the final meta-analysis. Overall, this was an excellent course.

The excitement that Kim expressed when she communicated in either writing or verbally. She made me want to get in there and learn the concepts if they seemed difficult.

I loved some of the articles that we were reading at the beginning of the course.

I felt the book was difficult for me to really understand.

I only thing that I would suggest as change for this course would be to have some more assignments in the beginning of the course to review the research process and a better review of systematic reviews.

I would like to learn how to do meta-analysis. I enjoyed the process of the review. I have been reading several meta-analysis in the past month. I have a greater appreciation of them. They are far more than a simple review.

Please include the criteria for picking articles that lend themselves to meta-analysis at the beginning of the course. That would be very useful.

It was a bit disorganized with the mid semester change from meta-analysis to systematic review but I realize this is new course.

This course has potential but needs to be redesigned and made pertinent to clinical practice. Example take a metaanalysis or systematic reviews and how would you implement that knowledge into practice
